ABDUCTIONS

By Eve Frances Lorgen, M.A.

It can hardly be called a true romance when two people are thrown together in an obsessive relationship just to fulfill a perverse and inexplicable alien agenda.

Budd Hopkin's famous Brooklyn Bridge UFO abduction case brought to light a rarely discussed phenomenon he described as "alien-directed human bonding experiments." Hopkins' recent book Witnessed recounts the dramatic story of Linda Nepolitano's (aka Linda Cortile's) UFO abduction in 1989 from an apartment window in Manhattan, USA. According to Hopkins, three men witnessed the extraordinary event, one of whom, (Richard), Cortile had previously met in her alien encounters as a child and young adult. The mutually-shared abductions and dream scenarios that took place between Linda and Richard were described as "alien-orchestrated bonding exercises."

According to Hopkins, the bonding exercises that Linda and Richard experienced are not isolated incidents in the abductee population, but are rare. Hopkins reports that he had observed the bonding dramas in 14 out of 650 abduction cases, which is roughly two percent of all his cases. He admits that the occurrence of this phenomenon may be greater, and probably has been overlooked until the Cortile case brought the bonding aspects to light.

Other researchers have described reports of similar experiences. It goes something like this: An abductee meets another abductee during one or more alien abductions or in very vivid dreams. The couple may interact on a verbal or physical level to initiate the bonding process. This can occur several times until a bonding occurs. The nature of the bonding exercises seems to be tailor-made to the individual.

The bonding interactions may or may not be recalled by either partner. Often, only one partner will remember the experience, while the other has no memory or only a vague recall. When both partners meet in real life, there is an instant sense of recognition and the couple may fall in love. There are variations to the pattern and sequence of events, but in most cases one partner falls in love more than the other—

The relationship between the two bonded individuals is such that both persons are magnetically attracted to one another, often in unlikely situations. The love relationship set-up may include a number of bizarre synchronicities, vivid dreams, and pre-bonding exercises during alien encounters. The orchestrated experiences are often intimate and sexual, such that one or the other develops an intense chemistry and love obsession with the targeted partner. Oftentimes, either abductee is married to or has an existing relationship with another mate. It makes no difference.

The emotional, passionate and even telepathic connection between the bonded pair is unlike normal love relationships. (Whatever normal is, anyway.) Some have described it as the most phenomenal love imaginable, to the point of total spiritual immersion or in-dwelling with their "be-loved." Then the inevitable happens. It's absolutely devastating. The targeted love partner becomes "switched off" and the love-struck "other half" becomes painfully unrequited. The chosen partner usually has an initial love attraction (or friendship) for the other, yet loses interest, often right after an alien abduction or dream-like encounter. If one or the other abductee has a good recall of their dreams and alien encounters, they may remember being previously bonded together in one or more experiences.

Some abductees report spontaneous remote viewing images of the intended partner in such a way as to elicit emotions such as jealousy, obsessive love, yearning and grievous unrequited love pangs. The alien-manipulated love obsession process is akin to a carrot being dangled just enough to get the obsessed lover into a constant cycle of love and unrequited love. This may extend from relationship to relationship and is emotionally exhausting.

In the vignettes that follow, I will demonstrate what I believe to be examples of alien-directed human bonding and relationship manipulations. In two of the cases, a love obsession resulted, leaving one partner emotionally devastated. In the other case, a relationship manipulation took place to prevent a specific love affair from continuing. Some names and minor specifics were changed to protect the clients' confidentiality.

Charles and Sara, both lifelong abductees, meet at a social event. The two feel an instant sense of recognition and are attracted to one another. They talk and exchange phone numbers so they can continue to correspond.

Charles has a strong romantic attraction to Sara even though Sara is already happily married. Sara seems very familiar to Charles and he is convinced he has had dreams and shared alien encounters with Sara before. Charles distinctly remembers seeing Sara nude in an intimate dream-like encounter where bonding took place. He was able to correctly identify specific body marks on Sara that he could not have known otherwise.

Charles becomes infatuated with Sara, telephoning her several times a day. He tells Sara of his alien experiences, claiming that the aliens set them up together, pre-bonding them because they have "similar energetic frequencies." Sara does not recall anything of this nature, nor does she share romantic notions for Charles. Sara is, however, baffled by Charles' correct knowledge of her body marks and odd synchronicities that have recently arisen between them.

Charles continues to have flashbacks of intimate contact with Sara and even has future memories of them being together with a child of their own. In fact, Charles believes that Sara's young child from her current marriage may actually be his, and she doesn't know it. He becomes obsessed and believes they have a special destiny together. Charles cannot take the hint from Sara that she is not interested in him, and continues to call her often.

Sara doesn't reciprocate love feelings for Charles and starts avoiding him, leaving him crushed with unrequited love. The obsession has taken hold and Charles does not give up hope that they will have a special love relationship in the future. After all, this is what the aliens apparently communicated to him and Charles wants to believe the extraterrestrials are here for our own good.

Andrew, a 32-year-old single male abductee, has had difficulty maintaining long term relationships with women. He fell in love with a beautiful, affectionate woman named Sharon. Two months into the romantic relationship, a tall, tan, "Gray" alien and a shorter, dark alien in a hooded cloak visited the sleeping couple. Andrew recalled the first part of the abduction with the tan figure, but feelings of fear and foreboding overcame him and the memory faded.

Sharon was seriously distraught and emotionally distant the next morning. Later, Andrew discovered that the cloaked alien jabbed Sharon in the side with a pointy, spear-like object as the entity warned her to stay away from Andrew, leaving her petrified. Even though Sharon found a red triangular mark on her body the next morning, she assumed it was just a horrible dream.

Less than two weeks later, Sharon no longer had amorous feelings for Andrew and seemed to be "switched off." She soon broke off the relationship, leaving Andrew grief-stricken.

In the next couple of months the aliens revisited

Andrew. In this encounter, he remembered graphic imagery of his girlfriend Sharon being a "slut," having sexual relations with his best friend, making it appear that his best friend cheated on him behind his back. This invoked feelings of intense jealousy, rage and unrequited love for his ex-girlfriend Sharon.

In another relationship of Andrew's, the aliens again interfered. This particular girlfriend, Ingrid, did not recall the alien visitation they both shared one night. Andrew remembered the tall, tan aliens in the room and saw Ingrid sitting up in bed, her face contorted in horror, frozen into a silent scream. During this encounter, Andrew attempted to ask the alien, "Why are you always interfering?"

distrusts the aliens for interfering in his love life. Even so, Andrew maintains a positive and hopeful attitude about overcoming these obstacles and has had some success in resisting abductions.

Sophia, a 33-year-old married wife and mother, was on a truth quest concerning her lifelong alien encounters. Her husband George did not share her spiritual interests or fascination with UFO phenomena. George was not an abductee and spent most of his time working long hours in his career. His emotional coolness left Sophia lonely and wanting a companion who could understand. During Sophia's alien encounters, George seemed to be "out cold" or deathly unconscious. In any event, he was conve-several dreams of him in which she was able to pick up real information on Dave's personal life that she had no actual way of knowing.

Dave started having spontaneous remote-viewing images of Sophia, which she was able to confirm as true to detail. Sophia also had remote-viewing images of Dave, and intuitively knew things about him and his family, which he confirmed also.

Sophia was in love with Dave and couldn't understand why she loved him so much, as Dave was many years older than she and not really her type. The two experienced a strong, spiritual and emotional connection with one another as if they had known each other for years.

Sophia made plans to visit an abduction researcher and hypnotist, but was detracted from visiting the therapist following an encounter akin to a virtual reality abduction involving military men. She became ill after the threatening scenario and could not visit the therapist. One of Sophia's main reasons for seeing the therapist was due to her overwhelming love obsession with Dave.

Sophia called Dave often, initiating most of the communication. Soon, she started to get the feeling he was trying to get rid of her, as he became indifferent and uncaring. Even though Dave rarely called Sophia or reciprocated her affections, she made excuses that he was just too busy and really would be with her if he could.

Wrong. Dave was friendly and enjoyed Sophia's affections, but he was not in love with her. It didn't seem to matter to Sophia, as she thought that perhaps in the future they would end up together. After all, she reasoned, the synchronicities profound love and bonding they experienced must have been divinely ordained.

Two years later, with the help of an understanding abduction therapist, Sophia's love obsession with Dave finally tapered off. It had taken an enormous emotional and physical toll on Sophia and at one point she became very ill. Part of the therapeutic process was for Sophia and her

There was something real, possibly sinister, going on beneath the veil of alien contact in these people's lives.

Within seconds of his request, Andrew experienced intense pain and blacked out.

After the abduction, Ingrid abruptly changed her amicable attitude from indifference to outright nastiness, and the love affair suddenly ended.

Andrew's persistence at pressing the aliens for an answer was met with a barrage of platitudes such as, "She wasn't one of us. You are one of us. She wasn't necessary, not part of it. She doesn't understand us." And the notorious, "You are not ready yet to know."

After both of these broken relationships, the aliens projected into Andrew's mind seductive images of a beautiful, exotic Tahitian woman with children, implying that this was Andrew's future wife and kids. The understood message, according to Andrew, was, "If you stick with us and do as we say, this is what we will give you." It never happened. The aliens lied.

Today, Andrew is still single and niently out of town or unavailable.

When the couple's daughter turned two, she would awake screaming in terror during the night and hide in her bedroom closet, "away from the monsters." This sometimes happened on the same nights Sophia had alien intruding "dreams." During these periods, the daughter acted out with a lot of anger, especially towards her father.

In the midst of her quest for an abduction therapist, Sophia met an older man named Dave, also an abductee, but happily married. When the two met, Dave couldn't stop staring at Sophia as if he knew who she was. Both exchanged business cards after briefly meeting at a UFO conference and continued to communicate by telephone.

Sophia then recalled deja vu type dream memories of having been with Dave before in very intimate detail, years before having met him. She became empathetically connected to Dave and had husband George to undergo marital counseling, bringing to light the awareness and effects of alien abductions, and avoiding emotional isolation from one another.

Even though Sophia and George's marriage is still intact and has improved, the love obsession left Sophia very hurt. She loves her husband, yet admits she is not as attracted to him anymore. Sophia's consolation is her faith in God and helping others.

On the surface, these relationship problems appear to be easily explained as marriage and family issues. But as I got a closer look at a number of abductees' lives and interpersonal relationships, it made me wonder. The psychological swamp gas theory was no longer palatable. There was something real, possibly sinister going on beneath the veil of alien contact in these people's lives.

It made me ask a classic question—what came first, the chicken or the egg? Are some dysfunctional relationship problems due to faulty coping mechanisms of the individual's response to alien abductions, or have the aliens deliberately contrived the family problems all along?

In my experience counseling abductees, one of the hallmarks of these people's lives is (their sense of emotional isolation and feeling misunderstood). The pattern of emotional isolation may be an unconscious behavior on the part of the abductee, stemming from his or her own family of origin issues. (In many cases, the alien abductions are multigenerational). The isolation can also be a pre-conditioned response the aliens instill into the abductees to keep them from talking. Or worse, it could be a result of the aliens manipulating the lives of the abductees, closest friends, lovers and family members. In my professional opinion, all three factors are responsible for the effects observed in these unique situations.

Some researchers believe that the human bonding relationships which result in high drama and love obsessions may be instigated for purposes other than the alien breeding and hybridization program, as one may suspect at first glance. (Although that is a factor that can't be ignored).

Barbara Bartholic, a hypnotherapist and abduction researcher for over 25 years, has studied and defined the love obsession phenomenon down to a "1." "First," Barbara states, "the individuals are set up during encounters from childhood for maximum emotional and sexual bonding. The bonding process sets the stage for the drama of the love obsession. The aliens are somehow able to harvest the energies emitted by the emotionally charged persons. These emotions range from intense love, longing, passion, rage, jealousy and anticipation of one's beloved."

Bartholic believes we are all affected by this phenomenon, not just abductees and contactees. It is just that we only find out about this love obsession phenomenon and all its associated life dramas through the ones who do remember.

"The love obsession drama can be played out on a large scale as well," Barbara adds. "This is incorporated through glamorous public figures or super stars." The drama-directing aliens can use the superstar images for massive unrequited love obsessions in the general population. "In short," Barbara concludes, "It is like one big human Nintendo game."

Budd Hopkins takes a more conservative approach and stated, "The bonding phenomenon is not an across-the-board aspect of abductions. It is relatively rare and must be differentiated from group abductions where two or more persons get taken simultaneously, like husband and wife, or friends for various reasons." When asked about the general trend of how the abductees handle the bonding dramas, Hopkins commented, "It depends on the circumstances. If they are already married, it is extremely difficult."

According to both Bartholic and

Hopkins, the bonding is not always directed towards romantic, opposite sex situations, and can include same sex friendships and even homosexual relationships.

A particularly noteworthy aspect is the emotional energy derived through a series of intense dramas and crises. As ludicrous as it may sound, the aliens may feed off these emotional energies. I've had several persons admit to me in private that they had a higher frequency of alien encounters during the more stressful and chaotic periods of their lives. As one of my support group members sarcastically described it, "The aliens have a way of jerking my emotional chain, putting me through intense highs and lows."

In the face of adversity, some abductees will choose to learn from every experience, whether good or ill. Sophia, a member of my support group, confessed, "Once I decided to pursue in-depth research into my abductions, a series of tests and trials assailed me, like going through a gauntlet of spiritual warfare."

We may never know the true reasons for aliens interference in our relationships. But from what some abductees have reported, the effects are both devastating and exhilarating. After surviving the grievous effects of an alien-contrived love obsession, Sophia poetically stated, "Even though my experiences have been incomprehensibly painful, I wouldn't trade them for any other. I realize it's better to have loved and lost, than to never have loved at all."

'The Love Bite'

Alien-instigated human bonding dramas, relationship manipulations, and love obsessions

By Eve Frances Lorgen, M.A.

The reality of alien abductions seems to be the thorn in the side of the UFO community. As ufology struggles to maintain a credible, scientific, nuts and bolts approach, alien abduction reports continue to rise with subjective and nonsensical fervor. One can look at this thorn in the side as a symptom of a larger problem that has yet to be diagnosed in the body of humanity.

Eve Frances Lorgen

As an abductions researcher of 15 years, and from the perspective of female intuition, I contend that most ufologists and abduction researchers are so adamant about the nuts and bolts that they overlook the whole drama of what is taking place in abductees' lives. Specifically, I am referring to a variety of alien-orchestrated human bonding dramas, relationship manipulations, and love obsessions that are carried out in the abductee population.

Raggedy Ann & Andy

This angle of approach is better understood if you place yourself in the position of a drama director. Imagine, for a moment, watching a children's puppet show. Raggedy Andy meets Raggedy Ann. They flip and flop to the tune of an enigmatic love affair. Raggedy Andy courts his beloved Ann, wooing her to that anticipated kiss. Raggedy Ann swoons into a spell of romantic love. The curtain closes.

Next scene: Raggedy Ann is yearning for her newfound knight in shining armor. Raggedy Andy sees her, but instead of running to embrace her, turns around and walks off stage, leaving Ann grieved with unrequited love. Raggedy Andy and Ann are not really puppets; they're real people who have had lifelong alien encounters. The puppet masters are the aliens playing the role of the proverbial Cupid and his arrow.

Perhaps a puppet show is a harsh analogy for the lives of some abductees caught in the dramas of the alien matchmakers. But I adjure you to take a look from a different perspective, one that asks different questions regarding the modus operandi of the alien

About the author

Eve Frances Lorgen has been a researcher in the alien abduction phenomenon for more than 15 years and conducts a support group for experiencers in north San Diego County, CA. She holds a Master's of Arts degree in Counseling Psychology, a Bachelor of Science in Biochemistry, studies in oriental medicine, dreamwork, paranormal and the occult, the Bible, reverse speech, alien implant research, fluorescence markings post abduction, and health and medical issues of abductees. She has published several articles internationally. Currently she is co-authoring a book with Barbara Bartholic entitled The Love Bite, which should be out sometime in 1999.

Editor's Note: If there are UFOs, if there are occupants, if there are abductions, and if aliens are somehow manipulating humans, then the scenarios described by Ms. Lorgen are not so far-fetched as they might appear at first glance. In fact, given the importance that we humans place on sex—in music, advertising, and affairs of the heart—perhaps it would be more surprising if aliens were not also interested in sexual manipulation. The term alienation of affections may have more ramifications than we have thought.

intelligence. Throughout my experience studying and counseling abductees and "experiencers," I can confidently say that the alien presence—or whoever is acting behind its image—exerts a heavy influence on their lives, sometimes down to the lovers they meet and even the very partners they choose to marry.

Budd Hopkins' famous Brooklyn Bridge UFO abduction investigation brought to light this rarely discussed aspect of alien directed human bonding arrangements in some abductees' lives. This investigation, described in Mr. Hopkins' book, Witnessed, recounts the dramatic story of "Linda Cortile's" UFO abduction in 1989 from an apartment window in Manhattan. Three men witnessed the extraordinary event, one of whom (Richard) Linda Cortile had previously met in her abductions as a child and young adult.

Alien-orchestrated bonding

These mutually shared encounters and dream-like scenarios that took place between Linda and Richard can be described as alien orchestrated bonding exercises. According to Hopkins, the bonding that Linda and Richard experienced are not isolated incidents in the abductee population, but are rare. Mr. Hopkins has observed the bonding dramas in 14 out of 650 cases, which accounts for roughly 2% of all his cases.

Barbara Bartholic, a hypnotherapist and abduc-tions researcher of 25 years, has observed that many of these alien-manipulated bonding dramas result in dramatic love obsessions. Ms. Bartholic maintains that the bonding phenomenon carried out by aliens occurs much more frequently than one would think. Ignoring these dramas results in a serious lack of understanding concerning the alien intelligence and their motives for interacting with humanity.

A characteristic pattern

The bonding experiences exhibit a characteristic pattern and sequence of events that goes something like this: an abductee meets another abductee during one or more alien abductions or in very vivid dreams. The couple may interact on a verbal or physical level to initiate the bonding process. This can occur several times until a strong emotional connection occurs. The nature of the bonding exercises seems to be tailor-made to the individual.

The bonding interactions may or may not be consciously recalled by either partner. Often, only one partner will remember the experience, while the other has no memory or only a vague recall. When both partners meet in real life, there is an instant sense of recognition, and the couple may fall in love. There are variations to the pattern and sequence of events, but in most cases one partner falls in love more than the other and is left feeling unrequited.

A magnetic attraction

The relationship between the two bonded individuals is such that both persons are magnetically attracted to one another, often in unlikely situations. The love relationship set-up may include a number of bizarre synchronicities, vivid dreams, supernatural events, and bonding exercises during alien encounters. The orchestrated experiences are often intimate and sexual, such that one or the other develops an intense chemistry and love obsession with the targeted partner. Oftentimes, either person is married to—or has an existing relationship with—another mate. It makes no difference.

The emotional, passionate and even telepathic connection between the bonded pair is unlike normal relationships (whatever normal is, anyway). Some have described it as the most exhilarating love imaginable, to the point of total spiritual immersion or indwelling with their "beloved". Then the inevitable happens. It's absolutely devastating.

The targeted love partner becomes "switched off," and the love-struck other-half becomes painfully unrequited. The switching off is described as an emotional and sexual disinterest in their once "attractive" partner. The chosen partner may have an initial attraction or even a strong love for the other, but then loses interest, often right after an abduction or vivid dream. If one or the other abductee has a good recall of their dreams and abduction memories, they may remember being previously bonded together in one or more experiences.

Some abductees report spontaneous remote viewing images and visions of the intended partner in such a way as to elicit emotions, such as jealousy, obsessive love, yearning, and grievous unrequited love pangs. The alien-manipulated love obsession process is akin to a carrot being dangled just enough to get the obsessed lover into a constant cycle of love and unrequited love. This can extend from relationship to relationship and is emotionally exhausting.

Barbara Bartholic and I have compiled a number of abduction cases where a love obsession, relationship manipulation, or some other type of obsession took place as part and parcel of the alien abduction experience. In our co-authored book, The Love Bite, I take a closer look at the modus operandi of the alien intelligence by the very nature of the orchestrated dramas themselves.

The Love Bite will consist of actual cases of alien-directed human bonding matches, relationship manipulations, and dramatic love obsessions. A significant portion of the work comprises a brilliantly portrayed commentary on a psychological, mythical, mystical, and spiritual warfare perspective. The various "love bite" cases range from the less spectacular relationship manipulations (marital break-ups and questionable sudden urges to marry a particular mate) to blatant infatuations and love obsessions with unlikely partners, replete with high emotional drama and disastrous chaos.

For example, one person, while engaged, suddenly, without rhyme or reason, broke off the engagement and decided to marry another mate within a short period of time. Thereafter, the abductee's children start having alien encounters, while the non-abductee spouse (or abductee spouse who is in denial) is unbelieving, leaving their marriage partner in emotional isolation. The marriage ended in divorce, either from lack of compatibility, or a combination of things—including alien interference.

Partner in denial

In other cases, both husband and wife may be having alien contacts, while one partner is in denial of what is happening. The marriage may be manipulated such that one partner is switched off (usually after a series of abductions or wave of activity)--leaving the other partner vulnerable for further manipulation by the aliens. (Compound this with the normal temptations of infidelity.) The rejected mate and the "switched off" spouse is then open for another love bite set-up with other partners, if not kept in check. The real culprit is the lack of awareness of how the aliens interfere—and how to combat the effects—before the relationship or family unit is destroyed.

Some abductees handle the bonding experience well, especially if they are on the non-unrequited end of the love bite, or if the bonding engendered a mutual friendship. But for those who developed a love obsession with a partner and were unable to consummate the love, it is very difficult.

Abusive marriages

Many female abductees have entered into controlling and abusive marriages, ensuring a constant life of victimization and crisis that prevents them from addressing the core issues of abductions. I believe these types of relationship problems are primarily due to unresolved abduction-related psychological issues, other personal family affairs, and direct interference by the alien handlers.

The point I want to make here is that these relationship issues are unique to the abductee population. They need to be addressed as such, taking into consideration the reality of alien abductions. In other words, simply going to counseling, hypnosis, or other psychological therapeutic modes is not fully effective in treating these complex relationships.

In another anonymous case, a married couple went on a camping trip together. Everything was fine in the relationship until after an abduction during the camping trip. Afterwards, the partner who was abducted became emotionally and sexually switched off from their spouse and started using drugs. The substance abuse destroyed the marriage, and abductions increased—further undermining the strength of the marriage and the family unit.

Barbara Bartholic has investigated cases that would shock most researchers—let alone the uninformed mainstream. In fact, there seems to be an unspoken “no talk rule” about the more taboo elements of “negative” abduction reports, especially if shape-shifting reptilian aliens are reported! This serves to maintain the secrecy of alien abductions, forcing many experiencers into the inevitable “Stockholm Syndrome.”

Shift in attitudes

In fact, some therapists and support group facilitators across the country and abroad have admitted to me in private that there appears to be a shift in abductees’ attitudes towards alien contact. Many experiencers have accepted the reality of lifelong alien interaction, and may even welcome it. Instead, they choose to focus primarily on the positive aspects of being an experiencer, such as having psychic and spontaneous healing abilities.

The distractions outnumber the nuts and bolts in the UFO abduction phenomena. If we can get through the cloak and dagger confusion that the alien intelligence presents, then perhaps we will find that the very heart of the matter is in the human drama itself.

Kentucky object

Kenny Young reports an unusual “blue-object” was spotted in Northern Kentucky on Dec. 13, 1998. Blue UFOs, suspected black helicopters, power outage and earth tremors were reported in Northern Kentucky Sunday evening. A caller to the Bill Boshears radio program “Sci-Zone,” on A.M. Radio 700 WLW, reported visually observing a “blue-colored” object descending from the sky in an area near the Eastgate Mall, located off of Interstate 275 in Clermont County. The caller questioned if the object he observed could have been a meteor. While Pennsylvania researcher Stan Gordon, the guest for the program, listened intently, the caller reported the blue-colored object around 10:35 p.m. during the radio program.

A separate, independent report of a blue-colored object seen near Hopeful-Church Road in Boone County, KY, was received at 12:30 p.m. by telephone from a resident of Florence, KY. This person, whose name will be withheld to honor privacy concerns, left her place of employment near Burlington, KY, at 11 p.m. and was driving home. She had not heard the radio program and is an independent source. While traveling south on Hopeful-Church Road at 11:15 p.m., she reported spotting a large triangular object that seemed to be hovering. The object was composed of very prominent blue lights which blinked or traced in a vertical pattern. This vertical arrangement struck the witness as very unusual. She said that she almost hit a curb while looking at the object. With her car running, she could not discern any noise. She was impressed of a triangular structure behind the lights by discernible against the “skyglow” caused by light pollution in the Florence area, and by a partial luminance of the
