of entering a new dimension in a new form, and without conscious recall, achieving a lifetime of accomplishment according to a long range plan.

"So this was Cassandra's first lifetime as a physical human being upon a physical world. From the land of spirit she had planned and hoped that this first physical experience would be one of joy and accomplishment. She hoped and prayed that it would set the pattern for the kinds of growth and learning that would most benefit her soul. Although she knew from observation that she would have to experience such things as physical pain for the first time, she thought that she would be able to endure it. She felt that the fun of pleasant physical experiences such as eating, playing, working, dancing and crafts would compensate for any episodes of pain. She was especially looking forward to physical sex. From the realms of spirit, the physical sexual experience appeared compellingly intriguing and inviting.

"This is not to say that the spirit worlds are sexless. It's just that in spirit, sex is expressed differently than in a physical body. In spirit, it's an energy exchange accomplished through total merging of the spirit forms."

"You know, Michael," I said, "I have often wondered about that. I'm sure a lot of others have thought and wondered about it too."

"Well the purpose of this story, Joseph, is not so much to dwell on the spirit side of life's experiences as it is to illustrate the cumulative effect of one's physical incarnations upon the soul's growth and expression.

"Cassandra's name in that first lifetime was Naomi, which means pleasant. Pleasant would be a good description of that first life. Her childhood could be described as normal in that it was filled with the everyday adventure and excitement that accompanies learning and growing in a happy and love-filled environment. Her mother was wise and responsive to her children's needs without being overprotective or neglectful. It was an environment that encouraged creativity and growth and instilled an appreciation of life and of living things. It was certainly close to an ideal setting in which to begin experiencing life in the flesh.

"Her first tentative explorations into the area of physical sex were positive and natural. In the culture in which the family was living, the everyday approach to sex was more enlightened than in your world today. There was no shame to educating your children in all of the natural expressions and purposes of sex. Along with being taught the functions of sex, however, the children were also educated as to the nobility of responsible behavior. This meant that no sexual act should result in the debasement of oneself or another. It also meant that all sexual acts should be accompanied by an attitude of genuine love since it is dealing with one's very life force, and all life force is sacred and is God-connected. A normal pattern of self-stimulation was established at the pubescent stage and started the foundation of physical sexual experience for Cassandra in a physical body.

"During her adolescence, which we will not detail here, Naomi became extremely attracted to the art of dress design along with the craft of weaving fine cloths. In order to pursue these interests, she was apprenticed to one named Aladran, the finest craftsman of refined garments in all of Xanthia, the great city where they lived. One of Aladran's sons, named Ilus, was assigned responsibility to train Naomi in the skills of her chosen craft.

"Naomi proved so proficient as a novice, and she was Mother God and I are one.' Upon reaching this level of awareness, one then begins to understand all life.

"Nova Eight then told Victor that he was a major extension, or mini-soul, of one of the Eternals. Victor felt comfortable with this revelation. Even for one so young, there was a knowing within him that transcended any doubts he might have had.

"Victor's experience upon the Novic planets was not entirely pleasant from a purely physical viewpoint. The atmosphere was not sufficient to support humans from Earth. Consequently, Victor had to wear special life-support equipment wherever he went. Although the Novic people were accustomed to visitors from other worlds, and they provided such life-support systems within many of their public buildings, still it was inconvenient for an Earth human to function for an extended time in such an environment. It had not been Prime Nova's intention that Victor spend a long time in Arcturus. There were other worlds and galaxies to visit. Before leaving, however, Victor was to learn what the Novic scientists had observed and learned about the human sexual nature.

"Nova Eight knew about Victor's relationship with Cassandra. He knew how very difficult it was for beings with emotions to sever a relationship which brought so much pleasure and fulfillment. While he himself could not experience emotions, he knew from observation the traumatic effect that accompanies the separation of lovers in love. The length of Victor's separation from Cassandra, combined with his partial adjustment to all of the phenomena and wonders of the Novic worlds, served to rekindle the loneliness and hunger that burned within him. Now would be the perfect time for Nova Eight to speak about man's sexual nature. Under the circumstances, the lesson would be most meaningful.

"Nova Eight asked Victor to describe his feelings during the time that he was having his relationship with Cassandra. Victor replied that just being around Cassandra made him feel good. It made him tingle all over. Sometimes it made him dizzy. Always it made him want to merge with her, to couple with her. While joined together in the physical union, it was a bliss beyond compare. He said that for both he and Cassandra, the union imparted a different level of consciousness. He went on to explain that this altered state of consciousness produced a feeling, an emotion, of being 'very close to God.' He did not know how else to describe it. He said it also seemed to open up a deeper flow of creativity, of psychic awareness, of communication with other worlds and dimensions. All things considered, he said it was the only time in his life that he had ever felt complete. He told Nova Eight that each time he and Cassandra had had a union, he had felt incredibly good for several days thereafter, and that when that feeling of balance and well-being began to wear off, the urge to be with Cassandra became obsessive.

"Nova Eight congratulated Victor on his openness and honesty. He assured him that what he had experienced had been beautiful and right. He told him that it would form a good basis for him to be able to understand and relate to what Nova Eight was going to tell him about the sexual nature of human beings.

"For countless thousands of years, the Novic people had been observing humans of many worlds. Without exception, the sexual behavioral patterns in the growth told Endymion that such experiments had generated great controversy in some circles. He also mentioned that some in the Earth were making good progress in developing their psychic skills. He asked if there were any particular methods that were more effective than others in aiding psychic development.

“Endymion replied that the sexual energy exchange provided one of the best known methods for enhancing the psychic capabilities. He reminded Victor of the effects of being in the presence of someone of the same vibration—of how such a presence affected the emotions, the mental processes and the physical reactions. The interaction of the sexual energies heightens the sensory response. This involves not only the physical senses, but the entire extrasensory spectrum as well. The next time you experience this vibratory compatibility, he suggested to Victor, remember to remain silent and open your consciousness fully to telepathic communication. This statement by Endymion led Victor’s thoughts invariably to Protogenia. He could not wait to be alone with her again.

“That evening Protogenia and Victor arranged to be alone. Victor asked her if she had ever had a physical sexual union with anyone. She told him that while she had had several non-physical unions of an intense sexual nature, she had had only one physical coupling. That had taken place only months before when friends of her parents had visited with their teen-age son from the other side of the planet. She said it had been an interesting experience, but that the attraction hadn’t been strong enough to produce the desired effect. She then told Victor that the attraction which she felt toward him was the strongest she had ever felt. Victor admitted that just being with Protogenia caused a surge in emotion that only Cassandra had ever produced before. They agreed to sit quietly together as before and be as receptive as possible.

“It was only a matter of moments when both Victor and Protogenia felt a rush of energy which instantly altered their consciousness. They looked at one another in startled amazement, then closing their eyes, they both lay back to allow the communication to develop. So strong and pleasurable and pervading was the sensation that gripped Victor, that he felt certain that he would have an orgasm. Protogenia was experiencing the identical sensations. For a long time they both immersed themselves in the rapture produced by their intertwining auras. Eventually Protogenia reached over and touched Victor on the hand. This physical touch produced another, stronger surge of energy which resulted in a spontaneous mutual embrace. The embrace in turn sparked an explosion of consciousness that instantly opened their minds to the memories of their pasts!

“Victor could hardly believe the vision of his own past that was parading before his consciousness. What he saw at that moment was an excerpt from his life as Victor during his first Atlantean incarnation. He was age fifteen. He saw himself having his first sexual union with his girl friend, Victoria. He knew then that Victoria was Protogenia. Victoria had later become his wife in that lifetime and the two of them had been extremely close and compatible. This was the basis for the powerful attraction that drew them together now. Protogenia’s vision was paralleling that of Victor. Without speaking, each knew what the other was witnessing from the past. The realization of this only further intensified the experience.

“With this experience, Victor now better understood the power of the electro-chemical sexual energies to unlock the doorways of the various levels of consciousness. Now he could relate more intelligently to Endymion's advice regarding psychic development. The truly incredible thing to Victor was the total fulfillment that resulted from this exchange. Here, indeed, was an unbelievably satisfying and complete sexual blending without the physical joining. The energizing, balancing and harmonizing effects were as complete and total as any physical coupling could produce.

"In the days that followed, Victor and Protogenia continued to relate in the same way. They never did attempt a physical union. The sensitivity of their psychic abilities continued to increase. Their intuitive levels rose dramatically. They reached the point of full telepathic connection with each other. Coincidentally, the time had arrived for Victor to return to Arcturus. The thought of leaving Protogenia and the heavenly planet of Reath produced the same feeling of desolation that he had felt when he knew he had to leave Cassandra. Having had this experience, however, made him realize that (the potential existed for similar relationships in other worlds and places.)

"Victor and Protogenia agreed that they wanted to experience a physical union before parting. That night they began their exchange by gazing deeply and lovingly into each others' eyes. The usual rush of energy enfolded them. As they adjusted to the thrill and ecstasy of this love blanket of divine vibrations, they simultaneously extended a hand to each other. The heightened effect of this touch led again to a spontaneous physical embrace. While they were measuring the bliss of this further intimacy, their bodies were automatically responding by completing the intimacy of a full physical union. This final contact propelled them into a state of sublime consciousness and complete emotional bliss. They remained in this state for perhaps two hours. In terms of expansion of consciousness and sheer experiencing, two hours in this mood would have the equivalent of one or more lifetimes of dedicated pursuit of knowledge and feeling. While in this embrace, all of Victor's past Earth incarnations flashed before him. At the same time he caught glimpses of himself in the mental realm prior to this life, planning the various episodes of this life. He saw quite clearly what he intended to accomplish in this lifetime. Protogenia likewise witnessed flashbacks of her Earth incarnations and realized the importance that her lifetime in Reath would have in the future history of Earth. They both knew beyond a doubt that even though they would be parting physically, the telepathic bond between them would not be broken by the distance to Earth. This knowingness was a great comfort to them and made their final hours together very warm and happy.

"Nova Eight and Victor returned to Arcturus aboard an interdimensional spacecraft provided by Nestor. While this was by no means the end of Victor's experiences in space, we must shift now to Cassandra."

"I can't help but notice, Diane," I said, "that your descriptions of the sex life of Victor are becoming much more vivid and interesting. For someone so young, he was really learning how to get it on, as they say."

"Well Joseph," she responded, "a primary purpose of our story is to document the progression of a soul from one life to the next. A most important part of that progression is the awakening of a soul to the full potential of its sexual nature. If we can get across the reality of the deep emotional impact of sex upon the soul, then it will bring about a greater understanding of the best use of sex to mankind. Michael is going to speak to you now."

He had told her that the mind and emotions should be focused on one's own God Center and the God Center of one's mate. Their loveplay quietly progressed from the usual kissing and fondling to the casual shedding of garments. As their beautiful skin tones were unveiled and blended into the splendor of their surroundings, their bodies blended into that oneness that catapults two lovers into ecstasy.

"It would have been very easy for both of them to experience an almost instant orgasm. To have done so would have spoiled their chance of success and would have left them feeling frustrated and unfulfilled. Again, Dionysus had explained to Cassandra the nuclear dynamics involved in cosmic sex. They had a clear understanding about the atomic nature of things in those days. He had told her that it was necessary to excite each other to the point of orgasm, and then to control oneself to prevent the orgasm from occurring. He had explained that each time one reaches that point of orgasm, it causes a tremendous speedup of the electrons whirling around the nucleus of each atom in the body. If the orgasm is contained, then the electron speed continues to build as each successive point of orgasm is reached and held. The longer this process is continued, the more difficult it is to prevent the orgasm once the peak is reached. However, if you can hold off the orgasm for half an hour while reaching and holding a series of peaks, it will then become possible to experience the cosmic sex action-reaction. After about twenty five minutes, it will become very difficult to prevent the peak from erupting into an orgasm. Assuming that you do successfully withhold the orgasm after a sufficient rate of electron speed is reached, then you may possibly enter into the cosmic blanket. This is evidenced by a noticeably intense buildup of bodily heat which results in profuse perspiration. At this point you must remain perfectly still with your thoughts centered on the Divine. Then you will feel as if you and your mate have totally merged into oneness and are enveloped in a warm blanket of love and protection. It is in this state that the window to the soul may open and you may find yourself revealed to yourself. You may also find yourself in soul to soul communion with your mate. Even without the soul communication, you will know that you have attained an entirely new level of consciousness as well as a far more profound respect for the act of love and the magical balance it can provide to the body, mind, emotions and soul. Such an act of love will fill you with the greatest feeling of peace and joy.

"Dionysus and Cassandra were doing just fine considering that this was the first time that they had joined together. They had been in union for about twenty minutes and had reached simultaneous peaks six times. This had already produced a high state of balance in their emotions and in their physical bodies. Dionysus was becoming more confident. It was a confidence born of a lack of experience. After twenty five minutes Dionysus was once more reaching for that point just short of the pinnacle. He was now on unfamiliar ground and was not very sure of himself. He had been noticing that each time he had reached a peak, it had taken just a little longer than the previous time. This time, it was taking even longer. All at once he felt that surge that begins near the base of the spine. He instantly reacted to control and stave off the orgasm. He could not. He felt for a moment that he could, just as he had the previous ones, but it was like standing in front of an avalanche with outstretched arms expectin-been those of great intelligence, she said, who not only deny the existence of a God Being, but who also insist that even if there were, such a being would never speak or communicate in any way with anything so insignificant as a human being. Granted, she said, that it must be an exceedingly rare event for God to speak to anyone, still it has been known to occur. She told Cassandra that she was not referring to prophets 'speaking the word of God'. She said she was referring to the actual voice of God.

"She then told Cassandra that a few human beings in the creation had had that experience and that they had told this story. They had stated that God had spoken to them about a dual nature, a duality. They said that this information had been given to them in a direct way by that feminine polarity of God which identified Herself as 'Lucilau' and as 'Mother God'. This is what Mother God said:

"Love utilized properly can do anything. Love mis-used can imprison you. Love released and realized can free you.

The world needs to understand the duality that exists between God, and the need for love, to formulate that union, which is perfect and whole. All life has that need. It is by this principle that male and female, positive and negative is formed. Matter and anti-matter, the union, the coming together, all is formed by the principle of love. And love can do all things. I attest to this, for I lived in the void of loneliness, and I peered and saw the pains of my Counterpart and I was helpless, for I could only create, and neither retrieve nor destroy, but thereby I created and the worlds were born. It was the power of our love that manifested all things. It is the power of this love that raised mankind and humankind from a seed and a thought and a dream. It was the need of this love that spun the worlds in their orbits and flowered life in every realm. It is this same need desire and choice to be together, my Counterpart and myself, that will bridge the worlds entire and culminate our plan for the growth and fulfillment of all life.'

"Melissa then repeated the first three sentences to Cassandra to emphasize that the understanding of these words is really the key to all of life's relationships. To comprehend and live by these truths is the end and purpose of all life. The basis for every sex urge in every form of life springs from the duality of God. It is God seeking God. It is life seeking to complete and renew itself through union and reunion with its perfect counterpart. First, God created that duality by dividing <sup>itself</sup> into the positive-negative, father-mother, male-female polarities. From this separation and duality was born all life. As that life matures in the evolution of its own self-consciousness, this allows the Father-Mother aspects of God to come back together in completion of the Divine Plan.

"No one will ever be totally and perfectly fulfilled until they are consciously reunited with their twin soul counterpart. They may reach a very great level of fulfillment, but that total completion can only come from the conscious reunion with the counterpart. It is this feeling of incompleteness that drives one on and on in their search for the Divine, for God.

"As one slowly evolves in their consciousness, their twin soul counterpart is evolving on a parallel course which

All who hear these words may relay this to humanity, that the knowledge will be understood forevermore. Now is the time for this knowledge to be relayed to the worlds.

No man, no priest, no official may marry anyone together with validity in the name of God. No man in the world has this power nor this authority to bind two souls together forever. No man has this right or this power. What is the true meaning of marriage? I will tell you now. It is the coming together of two souls by their own decree, by their own love one for the other, and by their own decisions to live, to produce and to enjoy the company of the next. In the laws of man, to marry means forever. In the laws of God, forever is impractical and has never been the purpose nor the plan.

We are one—our souls, our identities, our goals. All over the worlds, we are one. We live and exist to learn, to grow, to evolve, to be better, and in the process, to help our neighbor, our friends, our companion entities and souls with us. This union known as marriage is a commitment that can be made only by two individuals within their heart. They need no intermediary, no spokesman. In life the coming together is decreed by what is in your heart. Even so, the time when you will leave. This, too, decreed by what is in your heart. No law of man supercedes the law of God's union. The only one who can co-join together two beings is God.

The only true unity binding marriage is when two individuals in their hearts know that they love one another, know that that love is true and real and unselfishly given—when they, together, enter in prayer to God saying, "Creator God, bless this union in your eyes, knowing that we will learn and live together as long as this may be productive for both, as long as we may live where this is the proper way of our soul—the lessons and learnings that we have—and knowing O God, that when our love, our needs, our ways evolve beyond this union, we leave this union, still in search of Thee.

The morality of humankind must realize this. The order of life which is to come in the world before you, the union that is binding is the commitment that you make one to the other. No law of man is meant to hold you. No decree by a priest or a saint meant to imprison you or stagnate you. But the soul at all times must feel free. And if you are together, it must be by your freedom that you have chosen this path. The laws of man may not supercede free will, for know the truth, whatsoever you sow in deed, you reap. How you live with another, will determine how you live with yourself.

The law of God—all things in the physical world are subject to change. All things in the physical world are temporarily established and laid, even the institution of marriage. It is not against God's law for you to love someone deeply, dearly and sincerely, to live with them, to give all that you have to give, and they to you; and then the day comes when the soul has other needs and yearnings, and the soul must go on. Gaze upon the cycle and wheel of life, the chain of life and reincarnation and incarnation everlasting. It is very rare for two souls to establish the rapport and the journey to travel through life forever together. When it does happen, it is the most beautiful of all things. But understand, that union is by their free will, and at no time do they feel imprisoned, at no time do they feel as if they are trapped, encased or lost. The main key to marriage is free will, freedom. And if your love is real, you will understand always the needs of your partner, the needs of your mate. And at times these needs may be different than your own. And when the day comes that when your growing and the growing of your mate depends upon your honestly facing this situation and growing even further, and if that growing means that you must leave one another, then know that the growing, the freedom, the love as placed by truth will show you the way.

So many individuals live a lifetime in frustration, pain and anguish, fear and doubt—when their own love, one for the other has changed, that they do not face the reality that total love is also total honesty, is also understanding the needs of another. Perhaps the whole of the world is not ready for this concept just yet.

This attitude that I speak of does not mean promiscuity, does not mean that an individual may move from one life, one mate to the next without remembering the law that what you do to another inevitably will return to you. As such, this principle of a love far reaching, of Divine Love, this is where we are leading—a love that is unselfish to the needs of your mate, a love that would adhere to the growth of your mate, even beyond your own needs if such was meant to be. It is a love that will accept sacrifice if sacrifice means someone you love will be better and happier. It is a love that is not possessive, nor jealous—a love that would not demand stagnation on the part of one mate to the next.

Understand me. The only value of a marriage that can ever exist is the vow that two beings make to one another, before their God. The only validity of this marriage is within their own souls and before that God Who is all.

“The emotion and the feeling of love that pervaded the auditorium as the Great Michael spoke was awesome. The angelic choir had continued their whisper of song all the while that the Great Michael spoke. They also played a typical game that happy angels play at such a joyful occasion. They would blend themselves individually into the little rainbows cast by the prisms onto the walls. Then the rainbows would seem to be dancing on the walls as the angels moved in and out of them. All were spellbound and totally captivated by the occasion and all that it portended.

“The Great Michael then congratulated Victor and Euterpe. He spoke to them quietly and then embraced each of them warmly and affectionately. As he was embracing them, an angel simultaneously appeared to, and embraced, every single person in the audience. No one in attendance would ever forget this night.

“This concludes our description and reference to the Atlantean lifetimes of Cassandra and Hector. As we have indicated before, it is not our purpose to go into great detail concerning any one lifetime. It is rather our intent to describe those important incarnations and portions of lifetimes that best accentuate the cumulative effect of a soul’s physical evolution on the pathway to enlightenment and Godhood.

“Before we continue, Joseph, an unexpected event has just taken place. The Archangel Gabriel has just appeared here to us and asked permission to interject some information which he hopes for you to include in your book. He asks for permission to speak to you now,” Diane exclaimed.

“Just before you said that, Diane,” I replied, “I felt a great rush of energy accompanied by a feeling of euphoria.

evolvment in physical life experience, their sensitivity to divine aid and their extensive help from both worlds enabled them to grow in wisdom and in love.

"The reputation which mythology has bestowed upon Cassandra of Troy is basically false. It is true that she was the most beautiful of King Priam's daughters. She was the most beautiful woman of Troy. Her extraordinary beauty in itself was responsible for many of the false tales which jealous women and frustrated suitors spread against her. In her case, her beauty had been earned by many lifetimes of dedication and achievement. It was wasted on Troy.

"Insofar as the mythological account of Cassandra's experience with Apollo, I would now like to set that straight. Mythology states that Cassandra agreed to make love to Apollo in exchange for Apollo granting to her the gift of prophecy. Mythology then states that after Cassandra received the gift of prophecy from Apollo, she refused his advances, whereupon he moistened her lips with his tongue and ordained that no one would ever believe her prophecies.

"What really happened was that Cassandra was born with the gift of prophecy. She had no need of Apollo or anyone else granting her any psychic gifts. She was an extension, or soul fragment, of one of the Eternals, and was just as much a God as Apollo. Furthermore, Apollo was part of the same Eternal as Cassandra. They had been brother and sister when Cassandra had her great Atlantean incarnation and they had a very deep and natural love for one another. In the Troy incarnation, Cassandra and Apollo had become lovers when Cassandra was sixteen and they remained lovers until Apollo left Troy some seven years later.

"Rather than spurning Apollo, Cassandra achieved with him as a lover what she had never achieved with Victor or Dionysus or any other. Their sexual compatibility made them intensely loyal to each other. Neither of them ever gave a thought to taking another mate while they had each other. It was with Apollo that Cassandra finally experienced the full transcendence of cosmic sex.

"They had been lovers for perhaps two years when it began to surface. Their unions, though never casual, began to grow ever more soul stirring and powerful. The greater the intensity became, the more each responded on a higher level of consciousness. It was as if each time they made love, they peeled away another layer from their souls. Each time a layer was peeled away, more previously learned knowledge became exposed. As more knowledge lay exposed, this led in turn to a continuing display of increasingly higher consciousness. If they were able to remain together, it seemed inevitable that they would eventually reach that pinnacle that most lovers are not even aware exists. At the time, they themselves were not actually aware of what it was they were subconsciously striving towards.

"The initial infatuation that caused them to become lovers rapidly deepened into love. As their relationship progressed, their expanding consciousnesses elevated their love to a very high spiritual level. And then it happened. One day as they were making love, Apollo started giggling uncontrollably just as he entered into his orgasm. This unexpected reaction triggered a similar reaction in Cassandra. The giggling continued intermittently for about fifteen minutes. During this time, each time one of them would giggle it would stimulate that response in the other. They found it to be an intensely satisfying experience.

SEX

he freely indulged his sexual drive, he did so within the bounds of restraint and need. He did not exploit others. In the process of his sexual growth and learning, he rapidly relearned many of those previously discovered sexual realities emblazoned upon his soul engrams. By the time he met his future wife, Andromache, he was sexually prepared for an enduring and fulfilling relationship. What I mean by this is that he had reached the point of being able to relate to a person on all levels—physical, mental, emotional and spiritual.

“Relating to Andromache in a total way was perhaps the easiest thing Hector ever did. You see, Andromache had been his beloved wife, Euterpe, in Atlantis. Their soul attachment was so deep and pure that their mutual love exploded from the moment they first met. There was never any doubt that they would marry one another.

“With the exception of Cassandra and Apollo, a more devoted couple could not be found in Troy. The difference was that Hector and Andromache were married according to convention, whereas Cassandra and Apollo were lovers only.

“Many of the deeds and exploits which mythology attributes to Hector are true so I will not be repetitive. What history and mythology do not reveal is the private life which we are chronicling here. I did not relate to you the quality of the sexual relationship between Victor and Euterpe in Atlantis. I did go into some detail regarding Victor’s affair with Protogenia on the Planet Reath. Let me state now that Euterpe and Victor enjoyed the fullest and most satisfying sexual relationship possible, short of that final pinnacle evidenced by the uncontrollable laughter of the Gods. Like Cassandra, Hector would scale that peak in Troy.

“It wasn’t until after their son, Astyanax, was born that Andromache and Hector began to reach the point in their intimacy where the promise of the cosmic sexual experience became possible. Before the arrival of Astyanax, they did not even suspect the heights to which their pure love would lift them. No matter how far a soul has advanced in a previous life, one does not reach the peak instantaneously in a given life. There is always the reawakening process. There is always the purification. There is no mockery on this sacred ground. One’s own deepest soul-self will see to that.

“The arrival of little Astyanax brought a new dimension to their love relationship. Soon the intensity of their unions began to unlock the doors to their souls. As they became more centered in their mutual love of God and of each other, the unfolding process quickened. The time had arrived for Hector and Andromache to learn and experience the full meaning of the words, “love is the only reason to live at all!”

“The ‘instinctive’ relearning process induced by their previously learned knowledge being released from their souls, began to exert its influence upon the atomic structure of their bodies. Each of their unions was now producing a greater and greater acceleration of the electrons whirling around their atomic nuclei. Michael referred to this phenomenon when he was describing the relationship between Cassandra and Dionysus. He did not go into any detail beyond mentioning that after a sufficient rate of electron speed is reached, one may possibly enter into the cosmic blanket. There are many other effects to be gained by a controlled acceleration of the electron speed within the body.”

“First of all, the cosmic sex process is nature’s way of natural bodily detoxification. This speeding up of electron movement on the atomic level causes a throwing off by centrifugal motion of toxic waste buildup within the atomic, molecular and cellular structure. The accompanying heat produced by the speedup of electrons burns up the toxic wastes that have been spun off. This is very important. The entire cosmic sex process is dependent upon a bodily purification on the atomic level. You see, it is the atomic level that carries within it the memory spectrum and the access to all frequencies of consciousness. If this level of one's being is clogged by toxins, then it is equivalent to short-circuiting one's cosmic connections. On the other hand, when the body is detoxified, then the pathway to cosmic consciousness becomes open.

"As the speed of the orbiting electrons approaches the speed of light, one's aura becomes more visible, one becomes more vibrant and healthy. Should the speed of light be attained, then one's body would literally glow and one would possess the consciousness to accomplish 'miracles'. This is the very thing that took place during the time of Jesus of Nazareth. However, I am not going to discuss that. That's not a part of this story.

"Andromache and Hector were literally transforming themselves and each other through their enlightened love. They were now learning to control their sexual unions in a manner that would allow the fullest expression of love. They were using their minds and emotions, their souls and spirits, as well as their bodies in relating to each other. They allowed themselves to be completely vulnerable—to be open and natural, to be honest, trusting and intuitive. Hector finally learned to control himself fully so as not to precipitate a premature orgasm. The stage was set. Their human atomic reactor power plants were ready to function in a manner to delight their wildest expectations."

"I like your analogy, Diane," I interjected.

"Thank you, Joseph," she replied, and then continued. "The human being is the most perfect atomic reactor that could ever be invented. In order for it to function properly though, it requires an enlightened male and female to activate the machinery and control the power. In the operation of the human power plant you have a radioactive rod penetrating a critical mass in such a way as to produce a tremendous increase in the speed of the electrons whirling around their nuclei. The atomic composition of the penis and the vagina is such that the friction produces an excitation and an acceleration that radiates throughout the entire body. It affects all levels of the human being including the physical, mental, emotional, spiritual and beyond. Mankind has always wondered just what it is that produces the incomparable thrill of the orgasm. It is a nuclear explosion of sorts involving an induced amalgamation of the spiritual self with the physical, mental and emotional self. This amalgamation is induced by friction. The friction is not only physical but is also electro-chemical-magnetic. It involves the "atomic" structure on all the various levels as stated, as well as the electro-chemical-magnetic exchange. The orgasm could perhaps be likened to the spark produced by touching wires connected to a positive and negative source. When the friction generated in the genitals accelerates the electrons sufficiently, it draws and attracts the spiritual part of one's being to connect more fully and powerfully until the orgasm is sparked. This cause and effect takes place whether one uses the sexual faculty for a higher purpose, or not. However, the quality, the power, the purification, the edification and all other aspects of the orgasmic potential are dependent upon the degree of knowledge and know-how of the lovers. To the extent that lovers can incorporate the cosmic requisites that we are stating in our story, then to that extent can they benefit from the available potentials of their union.

"Andromache and Hector were just reaching the point of extracting the fullness of the promise of their love relationship. The nights of their unions were now marked by the reverberations of uncontrollable laughter that escaped their chamber and echoed through the palace corridors. Everyone noticed the increasing glow radiating from the two lovers. It was too good to last. At least in Troy, for Troy's days were now numbered.

"The increase in consciousness and perceptivity brought about by their cosmic unions enabled Andromache and Hector to realize that they would soon be parted by fate. Andromache knew in her heart that Hector would soon die in battle, but she pleaded with him anyway to refrain from personal combat. Hector knew from deep within that he could not cast aside the skills and valor acquired in a hundred lifetimes to prolong his life span in this life. As dearly as he loved Andromache and Astyanax, his destiny was ordained by the overall events which were already in motion. It was now only a short time before Hector would fall in battle. By any measure, Hector knew that he had achieved his original goal in the physical worlds of attaining consummate manhood. He had enjoyed the (total) range of experiences that one associates with manhood in the physical body. A hundred lifetimes had then been crowned, by reaching the fulfillment of love's promise as released and realized in the 'laughter of the Gods!'"

CHAPTER 20

"Well, Joseph," said Diane, "that is the story of really happened to Cassandra and Hector as compared to the purely mythological version. The aspects of lifetimes as Cassandra and Hector which history chooses to emphasize, does not present any idea at all of true natures or spirituality.

"We are sincerely hopeful that our story presents a plausible basis for understanding the cumulative of many lifetimes upon any given lifetime. Cassandra and Hector started out from the world of spirit with the goal of attaining all that a woman or a man could reasonably hope to attain in the Earth at that time. Their goal was to become the consummate woman and the consummate man. It took them one hundred lifetimes. They achieved their goal, and their souls advanced, accordingly.

"With your permission, we would now like to continue our story by relating to you what Michael and I have experienced in our last six incarnations. You will see that it is quite a contrast to what Cassandra and Hector had to learn."

"Please continue, Diane," I said.

"Without delving into any background at this

ventional marriage. In our way of thinking, feeling and relating, we did not believe that type of formality was required to join us. We soon began to feel as if we had always been together. Our attitude towards each other was one of total mutual love, respect and support. The sense of responsibility which we both displayed in our relationship was far greater evidence of our marriage than any exchange of vows before a third party. With this attitude, our love exchanges soon blossomed into incredibly moving and powerful unions. As was the case with Cassandra and Hector, we then began to experience altered states of consciousness. Without actually realizing what we were doing, we had been gradually increasing the length of our unions and we had been performing those other requisites which increase the speed of the electron movement within the atomic structure of our bodies.

“As our transcendent encounters grew in frequency and in clarity, we both began to experience glimpses into some of our past lives. The revelations exposed to us through these fleeting views began to startle us with their implications. Diane and I were beginning to see a large number of our past lives in which Diane was a man and I was a woman! In time, our most recent lives in which Diane was a woman and I was a man began to be revealed to our awareness.

“At last the full picture emerged. Diane and I had finally attained that state of being that marks the completion of the evolutionary process in the physical worlds. We had become androgenous. As you know, androgenous means that we had acquired the balanced characteristics of both the male and the female roles. Many people think that androgenous means that someone has finally reached a sexless state, a state of being in which sex is neither desired nor necessary. The exact opposite is true. To be androgenous means that one has finally reached a state of totally balanced sexuality. It means that one can express as either the male or the female polarity for a given lifetime, and do so in perfect balance. It does not mean that one switches sex roles within a given lifetime. To be androgenous is to be comfortable in whichever body you are wearing, male or female, and to live within the sexual framework intended for that body, expressing as neither bisexual nor homosexual, but rather as heterosexual. It means that at last one understands the full implications of the duality of life and how they, as individuals, relate to all life. It means that one finally knows who they are and what life is all about. It means that at last one can appreciate the full impact and meaning of the words, ‘Love is the only reason to live at all!’

“I love you, Joseph, and I thank you for listening to our story,” said Michael.

“I am Cassandra—Diane is Hector!”

“Man laughs at his greatness in taming the atom, but man has tamed nothing and man is only a fool. When man can tame the power of LOVE, then man has tampered with power!”
