

MURRY HOPE: "THE LION PEOPLE"

LONDON, 1988

ture, personal gratification or physical satisfaction. But as more amongst you become aware of the existence of the timeless state, the doors of knowledge will start to open for you and your perspective will slowly broaden.

Many of you are questioning why it is only now that certain information, such as the structure and role of minute particles, is coming to light. I have even heard it suggested the people always find what they are looking for when they start to look for it. The statement "seek and ye shall find" intimates that everything you can imagine is already in existence, so that it appears to take life from your very imagination. But which way round is it really? May we suggest that every possible permutation of experience, life, and beingness ad infinitum already exists or is being played out in another time-zone and when people are ready to accept this or that snippet of information they will find it simply by opening their minds to the concept of its existence.

Let us take a look at the metaphysical aspects. Some of those who follow spiritualism are often heard to remark that this or that guide does not believe in reincarnation, as though a belief in something were a prerequisite for its existence. Any communicator who confesses to having a limited knowledge or experience of Outer Time is admitting to his or her own development level. In my case, for example, by my very lack of knowledge beyond a certain stage I pinpoint my position on the evolutionary ladder, which emphasizes the fact that I have not yet reached that Centre Point that you call the Godhead.

When referring to the intelligence that motivates your body and the various levels of its manifestation you have many terms: soul, spirit, ego, etheric body, astral body, or whatever, according to your religious or philosophical persuasion. I would like to dispense with all these and describe that spark as the 'essence', and its manifestation in fragment form as the 'psyche'.

Many of the terms you employ in metaphysical parlance - 'astral' and 'etheric planes', 'vibrations', 'higher' or 'lower' levels, 'brotherhoods of light', etc. - are but descriptions of what we know as 'time-zones'. Our advice would be to wipe your slates clean and stop trying to over-categorize everything, because many of these terms only engender resentment in younger psyches and a sense of alienation in their spiritually older brethren. Try substituting the words 'aware' and 'more aware', for what you call a higher level merely refers to a time-zone encompassing a wider and more comprehensive field of experience. The ultimate time-zone, or Centre Point, is active/passive, male/female, quaternionic, and embraces all archetypes, including those unfamiliar to your evolutionary strain. All life forms can find their own god or goddess by seeking the archetypal or elemental force within that Centre Point which corresponds to their own unique spark.

From the aforesaid, you have no doubt gathered that there is no point at which the evolving essence suffers annihilation. The process of individuation from its originating collective provides the psyche with the impetus which carries it along the linear or Inner Time path of return to the more subtle realms, and from thence to its creative source.

The nearer that any form of life or intelligence gets to the Centre Point the more understanding and true knowledge it has access to, and the wiser it becomes as it can see more of the whole picture. Every living thing - each person, plant, stone, planet, star and all that is accommodated thereon or therein - contains an aspect of the central creative force. In order to make contact with that Essence you need to know your individual Self. We will teach you how to find your own Personal Symbol, and your God Symbol which is your time-track to the Centre Point, and although your comprehension of that Centre will be governed by your stage of awareness, this does not mean that even the least experienced of any of us, or the youngest psyche may not reach out. What each of you sees and learns through practising the exercises we will give you will be personal to you and as valid an experience as anyone else's.

It is a great pity that over the years of Inner Time on your planet some of you have found it necessary to give vent to your religious insecurities by persecuting those whose concept of the Centre Point does not correspond with or complement your own. Sad! Perhaps when Earth technology and scientific research finally open the doors to other dimensions, which we know they will, mankind will overcome this streak of intolerance that shackles him to Inner Time.

TIME

The tendency among most of you is to look at time as starting with a given event - for example, the so-called 'Big Bang' - and proceeding forward in a straight line. Time is not linear: it curves. Even those amongst you who consider yourselves enlightened and who discuss reincarnation in eager tones make the linear mistake. You say, "I had a bad life in 1400, but since then I've made up for it." Because you see a situation from the standpoint of Inner Time, it appears to you that your psyche commenced its journey in the past and progressed towards the future. But as viewed from the Centre Point you and all other life forms experience in the Eternal Now. I have also heard time referred to as a spiral, but even this is not strictly accurate because a spiral goes somewhere. Time is simply an energy which manifests according to the nature, density and frequency of the force fields which pass through it.

I often hear you refer to those intelligences who are very near to the Centre Point as 'Masters' or 'Illumined Ones'. One of the hallmarks of an old, time-travelled essence is a deep understanding of the suffering of others and an ability to communicate that understanding through love. The banner or flag under which such a being may choose to acknowledge the Centre Point is irrelevant, as they have been known to shelter conveniently under the umbrella of your orthodoxy if that will enable them to get on with the task of caring and loving.

As I scan the minds of future readers of these scripts I see confusion regarding the term 'Centre Point', for this might imply to them a fixed position which would clash with my description of a limitless, timeless state. It is simply a term of convenience that I have used to try to convey the concept of a central source from which issue an infinite number of life forms, designed to experience on an infinite number of levels, thus continually adding to the original source. But as this source is itself a state of timelessness, all experiences that are undergone in closed time circuits, while these may appear time-bound by the experiencing fragments in question, are instantaneously known and felt in the Outer Time oneness of the initial creative impulse that you would refer to as 'God', or the 'Goddess', depending upon your persuasion.

There are many time-zones which even I cannot conceive of; some involve dense matter, some do not; some pass one through another like your X-rays; while others are parallel to your own world. It is possible to negotiate these zones while in sleep state, but when awake most of you cannot perceive anything around you other than that which vibrates at the same frequency as your own and is therefore visible to you either with the naked eye or through sensitive instruments. Animals, strangely enough, are not thus blinded. In fact, many of them are nearer to the Centre Point than large numbers of your own people. But since you are given to judging evolution by intellectual standards of achievement, your yardsticks are materialistic ones and do not apply in other time-zones. The ability to build a house of bricks, work through a page of mathematics, or construct deadly weapons of destruction are not valid criteria for judging the wisdom of an evolving essence.

The majority of you, like many of those guides or deceased relatives you believe in, do not have access to the experiences of your other fragments. The human brain was originally designed to accommodate a series of evolutionary programmes that would carry it through from the primitive to the more advanced stages of somatic experience, and when a certain area of that organ is stimulated the faculty of inter-time sight becomes activated. Although this is not likely to occur worldwide until certain future events have transpired, there are a few among you who have already experienced this development. Mature psyches are able to handle the results. But when the mutation occurs in those who are cosmically younger, they frequently either lack the logic to assess and control it or the cosmic awareness to carry them sanely through its development in the prevailing climate of prejudiced opinion.

One of your television writers invented a character called 'Dr. Who' for the entertainment of children, and since this time traveller first put in an appearance others have elaborated on his adventures. Although these stories contain a grain of truth, they are technologically overstated for mind power will ultimately surpass all 'nuts and bolts' technology.

EVOLUTION

U
Dr. Who, like his Star Trek counterparts, finds himself in many periods of history, both on your planet and other worlds, and escapes his assailants in ingenious ways, much to the delight of old and young amongst you. Beings from the future can incarnate into past epochs in your linear time, although certain periods are difficult for the evolved psyche or time traveller to negotiate, for the experience they afford is too limiting for any positive achievement in the spiritual sense. A mature fragment or psyche, for example, would not be drawn to incarnate into a race of primitive barbarians whose only pleasure was slaughter and torture.

QUESTION: If it takes millions of years to evolve in Inner Time, and those involved in this evolutionary cycle see time purely as linear, how can this equate with an Eternal Now, at which point you tell us everything happens at once?

ANSWER: Time is relative. Consider the speed of thought, which is infinitely faster than anything you can conceive of in your present methods of propulsion. An essence that is near to the Centre Point can create a thought in a less than a microsecond, and, in that instant, a billion year Inner Time evolutionary cycle takes place, somewhere in the universe. There comes a point at which an essence-fragment evolving through an Inner Time sequence becomes aware of Outer Time while still functioning within those Inner Time limitations. Your Earth is nearing that period, and when it is reached communications with other time-zones will become common practice. But first of all you will need to learn how to harness the forces of Outer Time, which you will do in due course.

QUESTION: Astronomy has recently shown us that quasars a long way away are receding at a speed near to that of light, and that they will soon reach that point in linear time at which scientists reckon that the universe began from one Big Bang. Is this true?

* ANSWER: In part, yes. But then they are only viewing the material universe, which is but one of many. This is because they are only able to observe that which resonates at frequencies detectable by their existing technology.

MANY BIG BANGS
The Big Bang theory is much cherished by many of your astronomers and astrophysicists, but again it is only part of the story. The universe breathes in and out from the Centre Point, alternately indrawing and receding with each inhalation and exhalation. When matter travels at the speed of light or faster, subtle changes are effected in its structure and nature. In other words it begins to penetrate other finer and less obvious dimensions. This might prove incomprehensible to many who have been programmed to one linear time-zone.

There have indeed been Big Bangs in past linear time, but not one of these actually started the universe. The universe which is visible to you, comes into being, when cosmic matter, that has been indrawn to a single coalesced state, reaches a critical mass, and, once more, explodes outwards, this being part of the continuing evolutionary process. The time scale your scientists are at present viewing as representing the beginning of the universe is but one exhalation that manifested in the worlds of dense matter, or what you would perceive as solid form. In time you will come to understand the nature of anti-matter, but that is another subject.

QUESTION: If you are from the future you must know what is going to happen here on Earth over the next few years. Why don't your people intervene and stop wars and famines?

ANSWER: Because nothing would be achieved, if we did. It is all rather like the sickness and cure we shall be telling you about shortly. Unless people understand why they are acting in a certain way, or why they decide to cease those actions, they will not be ready to venture into Outer Time, for they would only prove a nuisance to themselves and others. If you stop a child experiencing such things as disagreements with other children, fights, squabbles, jealousies, etc., and shield it from its own faults - selfishness, bigotry, persecution of the weak - it will never learn, and will only prove an even greater menace to society in adulthood.

If you are to stop fighting each other, erecting foolish boundaries, starving large numbers of your people, and treating so atrociously the other life forms with which you share your planet, it must be because you understand why you are ceasing to perpetrate these misdeeds, and not because a people with a superior no fallen beings in the way that you would conceive of them, for as all time is one your devils have long since taken 'U' turns and made tracks centrewards. Only you keep the memory of their misdeeds alive, thus perpetuating a fear and feeding personae that need never exist.

Pockets of misplaced energy can either be generated by intelligent thought, or through some evolutionary quirk in nature. It is always well to remember, however, that good constructs and evil destroys. A naturally destructive person is often out of his or her correct time-zone, although of course it depends on the context of the destruction. Allow me to elaborate.

Sometimes it becomes necessary to demolish in order to rebuild. When one time-zone is in the process of giving way to another, this will tend to occur, as with your planet today and over the next one hundred years. Demolition of this kind is usually brought about by several contributory factors: the elemental kingdoms, animal group entities, external cosmic forces and, of course, decisions of war made by your own peoples. In a mass about turn, such as you will be experiencing on your planet during the Aquarian Age, both spiritual and somatic mutations will occur.

Matter can alter in shape and purpose, and likewise the psyche can change direction. But, of course, this is not the end that your eschatologically-minded friends would have you believe for life will go on. There have been instances in some galaxies where suns have collapsed, celestial bodies have collided and conditions conducive to life, at one level anyway, have been drastically changed, if not completely obliterated, but life has returned, albeit in a mutated, reconstructed or elevated form. Like the phoenix, a new race rises from the ashes of the old with a new understanding, a new lifestyle, and a new dimension of time consciousness. When one of your youthful progeny grows out of its clothing that apparel is discarded. To discard your physical body naturally at time of death or exit is not destructive, as long as the intention behind this discarding is pure and in accordance with Cosmic Law. But if this process is hastened by one of your kind wishing to acquire the worldly goods of another, the intention has designated that passing to be a destructive or evil act, and the karma initiated between the people concerned would need to be played out. While it may be argued that all things that are destroyed are reabsorbed into the cosmos for recycling, there is also an ethic involved.

All must constantly change, but this does not mean that you are being constructive if you conveniently rid yourself of somebody who is proving a nuisance to you. All discarding must be a voluntary act of free will on the part of the psyche that wishes to exit. As the majority of you are still highly insensitive to many other forms of consciousness on your planet you tend to go about your path of destruction totally unaware of what you are destroying or the pain you are causing. But all that will end with time and the growth of your true sensitivity.

There is also a rather erroneous concept nurtured possessively by many of your occult traditions that all things evolve one into another. Throughout infinity, each impulse evolves within its own kind. Paschats do not evolve into hominids, plant spirits do not become horses, nor gnomes become domestic animals. Each life stream is unique unto itself, right to the Centre Point, where all blends into perfect harmony, and each partakes of a full knowledge and understanding of all others. Of course, much of that understanding is picked up along the highways and byways of time. Such is the established rule. And yet, within this infinite universe, there must always be the possibility of exception. Certain intelligences or essences that are near to the Centre Point, such as those who have chosen the teaching role, are able to move into evolutionary streams other than the one in which they originated.

There is one other impulse or group entity to which this also applies. These are the Guardians of Cosmic Law, who have the adaptability necessary to enter any time-zone or evolutionary frequency should the necessity to do so arise during the course of their duties. The name by which these beings are known to us would mean nothing to you, but as I know your predilection for labels I shall borrow a term from your religious orthodoxy and call them 'Seraphim'. But cases such as I have just mentioned are extremely rare outside of the cosmic teaching or policing professions!
