The painting is signed and dated in the bottom left corner: "René Portocarrero, 1963".

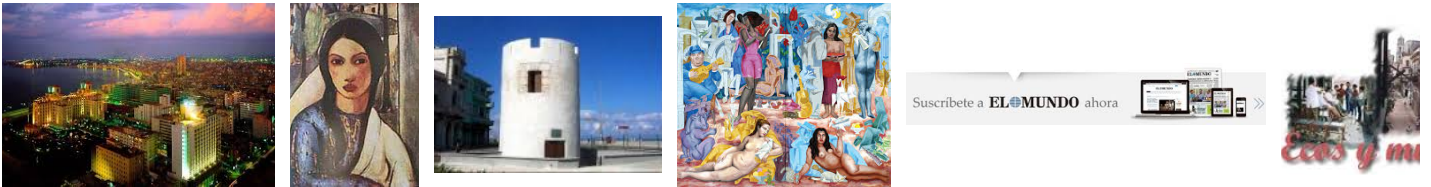

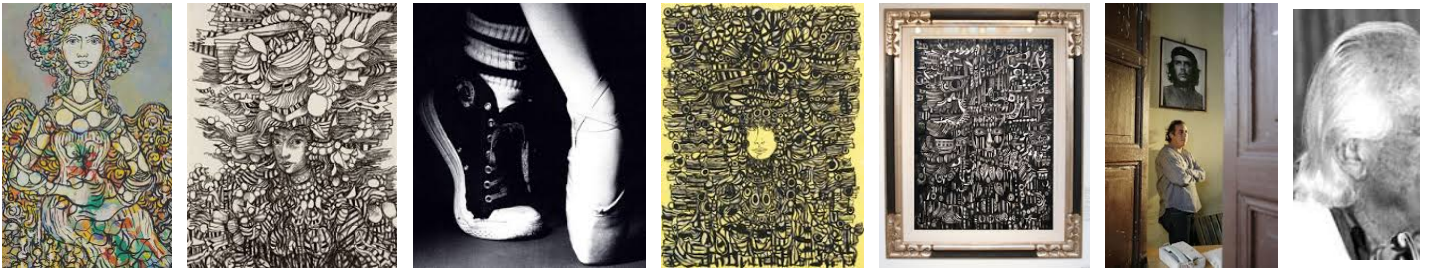

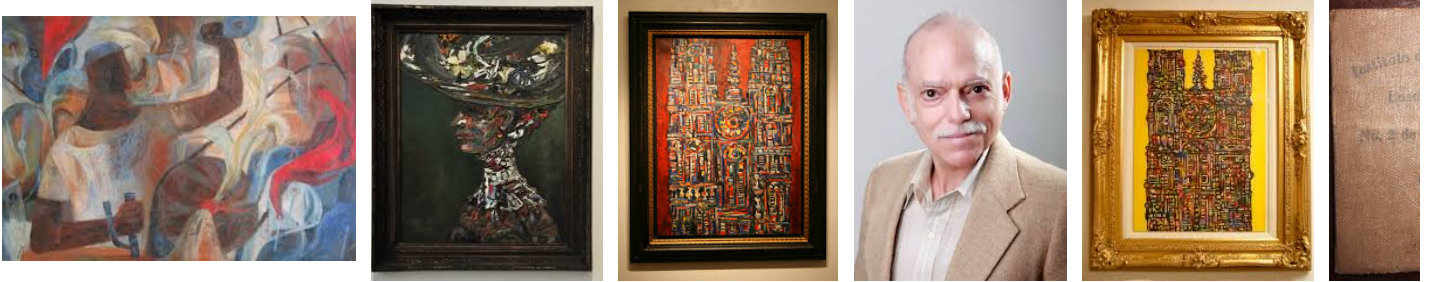

René Portocarrero is considered one of the most representative artists of the Cuban modernist movement. A multi-faceted, he was a writer, journalist, poet and musician. Portocarrero is a self-taught artist with extensive skills and influences. He arrived in the United States during the 1950s to escape the political and economic situation in Cuba. He lived in New York and then in Mexico, where he was influenced by the Mexican muralists and the Mexican modernist movement.

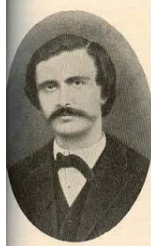

The artist was born in San Juan, a neighborhood in Havana. His artistic development began in the early 1940s, when Portocarrero was influenced by the work of the artist Juan Manuel Mendive (1910-1980), who was a pioneer of the Cuban modernist movement. Portocarrero's work is characterized by its dense, colorful and abstract style, which combines elements of Cubism and Surrealism. His paintings often depict complex, multi-layered scenes that reflect his deep engagement with social and political issues.

Portocarrero's work is present in important art collections and in the permanent holdings of museums around the world, including the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the National Museum of Art in Mexico, the National Gallery of Canada in Ottawa and the Museo Nacional de Bellas Artes in Havana, among others.
