Migrant Mother – Florence Thompson

Transcript Biography

...when you pass in a city, there?"

"I generally picked around eight o'clock. I didn't even weigh a hundred pounds. I lived down there in Shafter, and I'd leave home before daylight and come in after dark. We just missed! Anyway, we lived. We survived, let's put it that way. I washed from what they called a Hoover camp ground right there at the bridge in Ukiahville. I walked down there to stay."

Photographer Dorothea Lange took the image above of Florence Owens Thompson and her children in 1936 in Nipomo, California. At the time, Lange was concluding a month's trip photographing migratory farm labor around the state.
